Tacoma Area RV Dealers Ride Wave Of Popularity Into Fall RV Show

Tacoma, WA - It has been the best of times for RV dealers in Washington and across the country. "We're seeing all ages at our dealerships, especially baby boomers", commented Kevin Baker of Apache Camping Centers. "The RV lifestyle, whether it's a camper, trailer or RV, aligns perfectly with where people want to spend their time these days."

"It really doesn't matter the age, people are doing the math and owning an RV makes sound financial sense when compared to other vacation-related expenditures they could make for much shorter getaways", Baker continued.

It's true. Once considered a luxury item, RV's, whether they're a camper or a motorhome, provide a level of freedom to roam and experience an enormous spectrum of travel opportunities quickly, affordably and easily. Recent statistics reflect the uptick in popularity with more than 40,000 RV's sold and delivered nationwide in May of this year.

Paul Monson of Baydo's RV Center commented on the biggest change he's seeing in their customer-base, " We're seeing more and more millennials as new customers over the past couple of years. Many of them grew up camping with their parents or grandparents and want to continue enjoying their time outdoors in an RV. From the rainforest to the beach to the mountains there's an incredible diversity of opportunity to experience in Western Washington. Millennials have embraced those opportunities and are buying RV's of all sizes, descriptions and layouts."

Area dealers broadly agree, now is the time to buy. "Supply has been an issue. We're selling, like most area dealers, everything we can get our hands on", commented Chuck Joss of Valley RV Supercenter, "Inventory and selection is good right now but that will change by spring as demand outpaces supply."
